THE J. E. JONES LETTER

THE NEW PRESIDENT

A Nation stunned by the death of President Warren G. Harding early roused itself to ask, "what kind of a man is Coolidge?" The answer was satisfying in one respect, because everyone who knew agreed that "he's safe." As the Capital has taken his measurements in these days there has been general consent that President Coolidge may develop remarkable leadership in the great office to which he has been called. He is as much unlike former President Harding as Roosevelt was unlike McKinley. McKinley and Harding were lovable men who drew the people to them by the charm of their personalities. Roosevelt was a different type. Coolidge is apparently in another class by himself. In the Commonwealth of Massachusetts he was a leader in the legislature and as Governor he was a tremendous success. During his more than two years residence in Washington as Vice President he never gave the public a single thrill. But that is nothing against him. He is of the type of whom it might be said, "Yes, he has no enthusiasm today."

The last time I remember seeing him before he became President he was visiting the Lincoln Memorial. He was alone. As he walked down the steps there was something impressive and deliberate in his manner and I recall that I "sized him up" in my own mind and compared the wiry, sober figure with Lincoln himself. Calvin Coolidge is a sad-faced gentleman, but you know by looking at him that he possesses tremendous force of character.

Fifteen years ago I stood in a window in the office of the Adams House in Boston with Mr. Coolidge. He was an inconspicuous member of the lower body of the legislature, and I was unimportant, too. It was a chance meeting of acquaintances, and among the trivialities we talked about at the time was the crowd of passersby—the great throngs returning at eventide to their homes. He remarked: "I always wonder as I stand here how all these people make a living." The serious-minded New Englander was wondering then about the problems of humanity, and I have no doubt he has spent a large part of his life continuing to wonder how he could make it easier for the masses to make a living. Undoubtedly he has carried his share of the burdens of humanity about on his shoulders. He impresses one that way.

The old Yankee stock of New England furnishes a distinct kind of man, hard, stern, and a little bit of a humorist. It would be hard to find a more typical New Englander than President Coolidge. He is one of the few men who have ever wanted to be a great success. When members of the Headquarters Company returned to their barracks to go to bed the cot was all mangled, "sprung"—listening to all, and drawing his own conclusions from the advice he receives.

President Coolidge never sought the spotlight, and none of his acts indicate that he ever cared much about being loved, or even liked, as was the case with Warren G. Harding. An Governor of Massachusetts he had serious problems to meet and there was no time to be taken in taking full responsibility for the state. His own father says, "I think he'll do fairly well. He did fairly well as Governor and I guess he'll do fairly well as President." Father Coolidge evidently possesses all the New England calm, and apparently he does not look for spectacular results. Mr. Coolidge has a few warm personal friends, but there is no surplus of them. These friends expect him to exceed his father's estimate.

There are, right now, big events in the President's calendar and the success or failure of his administration will be already in the balance. No one knows what happens the New England Yankee may be depended upon to show strength of character and plenty of determination. He is likely to be a "Coolidge President."

Whether he will accommodate himself to the new political tendency that has made Congress "progressive" is an open matter about which there is plenty of doubt. The New England temperament is apt to yield slowly to new propensities, but there is in these New Englanders a passion for justice, for freedom and square dealing. It is possible that the new political activity will run so fast that he will be unable to keep up with them.

The American people will have to get acquainted with the new President. Perhaps he knows them better than they know him. At present the country feels that the new leader is safe and sane.

HEADQUARTERS COMPANY AT CAMP DEVENS

The Local Members of Maine National Guard Have Busy Time

The company entrained Saturday morning, July 21, for a 15 day tour of duty at Camp Devens. Leaving the Armory at 8 A. M., the company marched to the station and entrained for Devens. On reaching Danville Junction we changed to the troop train on the M. C. R. R. and from there proceeded to Devens via Portland, arriving at camp about 6 P. M. On reaching camp we found that Headquarters Company were to be in barracks by themselves and have their own mess, and we were to have some "chow," thanks to Mess Sergeant Bean and "Lanky the Cook."

Our first day was taken up for organization. Monday the Regiment went for target practice on the range and would have made a fine showing but Governor Baxter arrived in camp and of course we wished to do him honor, thus our program was broken up and we were unable to take up the usual course on the range.

Headquarters Companies are specialized companies, covering Scouts and Observers, Messengers, Motorcycle Riders, Telephone Operators, Wireless Operators, Visual Signaling and many other branches, and during camp the men who took up these different branches at the target school, where they are instructed in their line.

Entertainment was provided at Liberty Theatre by moving pictures and vaudeville, and the shows were one hundred per cent better than the previous year.

In spite of the fact that the program for the two weeks was broken the tour of duty was as a whole much better than in past years.

On Monday evening, July 30, at eight o'clock a banquet was given to all non-commissioned officers by Colonel Harry M. Bigelow. The following menu was served:

Olives	Cranberry Sauce	Pickles
Green Peas	Mashed Potatoes	Pickled Beets
Fruit	Parker House Rolls	Fruit Pudding with Moline Sauce
	Ice Cream a la Mode	Nuts

After the dinner was over an entertainment was by members from different companies, consisting of songs, dances, and banjo solos, followed by short speeches from the honored guests. Music was furnished by the Regimental Band. This being the first banquet of the kind proved to be a great success.

When members of the Headquarters Company returned to their barracks to go to bed the cot was all mangled, "sprung"—listening to all, and drawing his own conclusions from the advice he receives.

CARVER'S STORE ENTERED BY BURGLARS

L. L. Carver's store was broken into sometime during Tuesday night. Entrance was gained by prying open the back door with tools secured from the shop of Frank R. Bartlett which the burglars had also entered. The cash register, safe and some of the drawers in the store were ransacked and some money and jewelry taken. No clue has as yet been found of the guilty party.

HITS ON THE COMPANY MEMBERS

Oh, Hank, how would you do as scout as to rub dogs and called by the Sgt. Major?
Oh, L. C., don't let that cheese knife trip you while pulling off a review, it looks awkward.

For Sgt. R. thinks it best to have his head up when he is out.

Pvt. Brown has a fifty mind and likes to sleep in high altitude. He calls his cot to the ceiling.

Sgt. M. V. likes to take powder for his teeth, also for a month wash.

Capt. Berry advised his family so to come home after two days of escape.

Sgt. Davis was afraid of getting lost so he kept his glasses with him all the time.

Armstrong is so short legged he had to buy a fifty ear to keep up with his company.

L. C. as a greasy clerk makes a good mess for punch, also a good sampler.

Sgt. Rank. When he found out that we were going to have an all day battle he was taken very ill and was confined to his room.

We understand that Pvt. Bennett was in a very critical position of danger and was in need of medical attention.

Once Eubanks knew what the "Hot Post" felt.

What became of the layman pointer?

A FAMILY REUNION

An unusual gathering of all members of one family was the occasion on Sunday, Aug. 12th, of the celebration of the 85th birthday anniversary of Mrs. Angella Mason Clark, a representative of one of Bethel's oldest families.

There were present at the anniversary dinner, besides an older sister, Mrs. Mary Mason McNab, the four children of Mrs. Clark and every member of each family as follows: Irving Mason Clark; Edmund Clark, his wife Mary Field; Adele Field Clark; Rosecoe Conkling Clark, his wife Lillian Kimball Clark; and children Hugh Mason Clark, Wendell Kimball Clark; Ruby Clark Eldredge, her husband William F. Eldredge, Arthur Simeon Eldredge.

It is of interest to those who enjoy looking up the early history of Bethel and the history of the original settlers, to know that Mrs. Clark is one of the few descendants now living in Bethel of one of the early pioneers.

Moses Mason came to the town with his family in 1789 from Dublin, N. H., and his descendants were, for over a century, prominently identified with the town's affairs along with the Twitchells, Chapmans and others of the early settlers.

The original homestead was erected in 1893 on the farm just north of the covered bridge over the Androscoggin river and remains practically as it was built nearly a century and a quarter ago. There Mrs. Clark was born, a granddaughter of the pioneer, Moses Mason.

A son of the pioneer, also named Moses, lived on Bethel Hill and represented the district in Congress during the presidency of Andrew Jackson. A grandson of the pioneer, also named Moses, was the last representative of the family to own the home place in Mayville. The last named Moses died in 1901 and was an older brother of Angella Mason Clark.

Freight at wading into deep water. It is thought, was responsible for the drowning of Mrs. David Roy of Waterville, Me., who was drowned while bathing at Moxon's Beach camp. Mrs. Roy, with two companions, had waded into deep water and, becoming frightened, grasped the others, pulling them down with her.

Attendants at Grace Methodist Church, St. Johnsbury, Vt., at both morning and evening services heard the voice of the dead president. The pastor, the Rev. Ralph H. Moody, an ex-service man, arranged for two phonograph records. President Harding's speech in the presence of 5000 bodies of dead soldiers returned from France was given.

Three of the four Blumens kittens born by a cat owned by Arthur O'Brien died in North Adams, Mass., following an operation which separated them from the fourth member of the newly arrived family. The four kittens were joined together by their stomachs. The sole survivor of the operation, which was performed by a barber, is expected to live and inherit the 27 lives of his three dead brothers and sisters.

Thomas H. Durrell, president of the Fall River Mill Posting Company, received recently a letter that was mailed in Boston in 1916. The letter, it appears, was dropped in a mail chute and on its way to the box became stuck. There it remained for 12 years until it was found by workmen when the building was being torn down. It was turned over to the postoffice department, remailed and arrived at its destination.

The sum of $1,021,151.37 was received by Massachusetts in registration fees at the automobile bureau for the first half of the year, compared with $1,334,514.61 received during the corresponding period last year. In that period this year the registrations were as follows: Automobile operators, 189,335; motorcycle operators, 734; pleasure cars, 73,595; chauffeurs, 16,031; trucks, 1,738; tractors, 209; motor cycles, 1,449; trailers, 149; side cars, 481.

Crops in New England are developing well in spite of the slight rainfall during June and July, according to the New England crop reporting service in a statement issued at Wakefield, Mass. Hay, potato, onion, tobacco and bean crops are all doing well. Oats and grain have suffered from the drought, but are making good recovery. A report of recent rain. Harvesting of early tobacco crops is already getting on, both quantity and quality being good. Apple prospects are best in southern New England. Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont have less promising prospects. Peaches are doing well, but pears are mostly lighter this year.

Mr. and Mrs. Kowry of Attleboro, Mass., were before Judge Fox in the District Court of Franklin County, charged with abducting an infant and attempting to leave the state. Each was held in $1000 bail. A baby was born to the woman about seven weeks ago and when the child was two weeks old they left it with Mrs. Kowry's mother, Pawtucket, who charged them $7 per week. The couple had fallen behind in the payments called for the child, and reaching Wapone left it in a damp swamp without any clothing. The crying of the baby led to its being found about 100 yards from the Maine highway, though it had apparently suffered no ill effects from its exposure and treatment.

There are happening very numerous in Washington and Hancock counties, Me., according to reports of witnesses received by the fish and game department. One witness of long experience writes that bears were never before so numerous as now at Oak Mountain, Township 30, southeast Hancock county. It is reported that by Oct. 15, when the skin of the bear was in such better condition for mounting or making a trophy, many hunters will visit this region for the sole purpose of shooting a bear.

While 10 minutes from the time he called at an undertaker's, Alfred Chas. St. was found dead at his home in Portland, Me. Chas. St.'s call on the undertaker, who also carries a line of household goods, was to pick out a robe. That done, he turned his attention to coats, with instruction to deliver the robe selected, when needed. On arriving home he drank tea while waiting for the robe. He was found dead at his home.

TOWHEE PAIR

"I have so many names," said little Mr. Towhee, "and so have you, my love."

"Yes, I'm a bird with many names. Another one of my names is Chewink, and some call me 'Teacher, please.'"

"But I call myself either Towhee or Chewink just as you do, for you're my little mate."

"Oh," said Mrs. Towhee, "how we have puzzled people. They have heard you sing and they have heard you talk to me and they did not know which bird you were, for the people you have puzzled so have been city people."

"They're down around these parts for the first time this summer and they're much interested in us."

"It seems they know the Oven Bird family. The Oven Birds say 'Teacher, Teacher' over and over again, but we say 'Teacher please' and I think they really know us now."

"Yes," said Mr. Towhee, "they know now when I sing a loud and clear 'Towhee-ee' and 'Towhee-ee-ee,' with the last notes very tremulous and with all of our song very, very clear."

"When we call, we call a clear, sharp 'Cherlek.' Yes, it sounds just like that—very clear and very sharp."

"Three lovely notes and a tremolo is our best song, however. Do you remember, little mate, how I used to sing that song to you when you were sitting on your nest and when I would perch myself in tender trees?"

"Indeed I remember it," said Mrs. Towhee.

"I used to sing for long stretches at a time, too," said Mr. Towhee.

"And I enjoyed it so much," said Mrs. Towhee.

"Yes," said Mr. Towhee, "I always loved to sing in the early morning and even on into the morning. The morning is so fresh and clear and bright and sunny and lovely a time."

"Of course I liked singing when it grew later in the afternoon, too, and even on the rainy days I enjoyed singing."

"I still love all those times, too," said Mr. Towhee.

"And at all those times I love to listen," said Mrs. Towhee.

"How we do love the swamps and the wooded places," said Mr. Towhee.

"We like to scratch about," said Mr. Towhee.

"And you look just like the woods yourself, dear Mrs. Towhee."

"You match the leaves to perfection and your dress is so simple and so becoming."

"I am glad that it pleases you," said Mrs. Towhee. "But your costume pleases me. I like your black and white and brown costume."

"Your white touches look so lovely when you fly. Your brown feet are so well shaped!"

"Your eyes are so beautiful and such a handsome shade of red, and your back is so strong and so fine and glossy a shade of black."

"We have the same tastes. We both love to be around on the ground. We like to scratch about among the leaves."

"And our nest we like to have on the ground. Moss of bark and leaves and grasses was the best home ever a bird had, and the white eggs with the red brown dots looked into such dear little things."

"You have a white-eyed relative, I believe, but I am so much more contented a bird."

"Sometimes you're taken for a robin because the brown lines on your parts are so similar in shade."

"But you're not really white. You are smaller and I'm smaller still and there is an olive shade to my costume which is unlike the costume of a robin."

"That of course is speaking of our nests we should mention that sometimes we're called ground robbers and sometimes fence growers and sometimes fence growers."

"We belong to the Finch family, and a fine family it is. We cannot help but be proud of the family to which we belong."

"Ah, we had a pleasant little chat but now we must be looking for earthworms and insects with perhaps a few berries for dessert," said Mr. Towhee.

"I must admit I'm getting hungry."

"And now that you speak of it I realize I am too," said Mrs. Towhee.

"Yes, we must have a good dinner for our breakfast was rather slight this morning."

"Ah, that is the reason why I feel so very hungry," said Mr. Towhee.

"How I understand the reason for my great hunger. I always like to find that there is a reason."

"I am so glad to be able to talk with a bird like you."

KNOW YOUR COUNTRY
When addressing the Senate of the State of New Jersey in 1881, Lincoln said, "May I be pardoned if, on this occasion, I mention that away back in my childhood, I got hold of a small book, 'Weems' Life of Washington.' I remember all the accounts there given of the battlefields and struggles for the liberties of the country, and none fixed themselves upon my imagination so deeply as the struggle here at Trenton, New Jersey. The crossing of the river, the contests with the Hessians, the great hardships endured at that time, all fixed themselves in my mind more than any single Revolutionary event. I recollect thinking then, boy even though I was, that there must have been something more than common that these men struggled for. I am exceedingly anxious that that thing shall be perpetuated in accordance with the original idea for which that struggle was made."

Freedom in life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness was the "something" which Lincoln referred to in these lines. What do the political parties and advocates of government ownership and increased regulation of private and industrial activity promise the people that would equal, or in any way compare with the ideals which Washington and Lincoln struggled to maintain? Think it over.

THAT BAD BACK

Do you have a dull, steady ache in the small of the back—aching, stabbing twinges when sleeping or lifting—distressing urinary disorders? For bad back and weakened kidneys Bethel residents recommend Dean's Kidney Pills. Read this Bethel statement.

P. M. Wood, 4 Park St., says: "My kidneys began to annoy me after I had strained my back lifting. My back ached pretty badly and I was in bad shape for a long time. When I took cold, my kidneys became congested and at times they acted irregularly. Dean's Kidney Pills were recommended, so I began to use them and they took hold of the trouble quickly. I soon had relief from the backache and the action of my kidneys was corrected." (State record given June 8, 1910.)

On September 9, 1920, Mr. Wood writes: "Dean's have done fine work whenever I have used them for any sign of kidney weakness. I think just as highly of Dean's today as when I first endorsed them."

Price 50c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Dean's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Wood had. Foster-McMillan Co., Mfrs., Buffalo, N. Y.

HOW TO GET RESULTS IN BUYING PATTERN

Useful Suggestions Offered by Department of Agriculture to Club Members.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture)

The United States Department of Agriculture offers to members of its various clothing clubs the following suggestions on using commercial patterns:

In buying a pattern, be sure that its size is right. Patterns may be bought by age or by measure. For a girl of normal size for her years, buy a pattern by age; for an adult or a girl who may vary from the size, take the necessary measures and buy a pattern that corresponds to them. Waist patterns are numbered according to bust measure; skirt patterns are numbered by both hip and waist measure. It is better to buy a skirt pattern of the correct hip size, as it is easier to make slight changes in it around the waist than to alter it on the hips.

Before opening the pattern, read the directions carefully and thoroughly. Open the pattern and study the separate pieces. A guide chart is usually printed on the envelope and will show you the purpose of the various pieces. Put back into the envelope any pieces which are not to be used at once.

To lengthen a pattern over a waist or skirt, cut straight across each of the pieces that are too short, having the cuts exactly perpendicular to the line of dots which marks the lengthwise line of the goods. Insert a piece of paper as wide as you wish the pattern to be made larger; or, when cutting out the garment, lay the two cut parts of the pattern on the goods so that they are separated by a distance equal to the desired increase in length. When lengthening a skirt pattern, the pieces should be slashed about two-thirds of the distance from the top. In a waist make the cut about three inches above the waistline. In either case, make sure that the insert is the same width throughout. To increase the width of a piece slash it lengthwise and separate the pieces in the same way as in lengthening.

Another way of making a garment longer or broader than the pattern is to pin a plait evenly in the goods, lay the pattern over it, and cut. To shorten a pattern or make it smaller, take a plait in it in the same position as suggested for the slashes.

Spread the material out on a flat surface and arrange every piece of the pattern on it before beginning to cut. As many of the pieces are to be cut in duplicate, one can often fold the material, lay the pattern on it, and cut out the two pieces at once. In cutting the back of a waist or the front of a skirt (and sometimes the back of a skirt), fold the material lengthwise, lay the straight edge of the pattern along the fold, and cut around the pattern except on this straight edge. Pieces to be cut in this way on a lengthwise fold are marked on the pattern with crosses, or in some other manner.

Sometimes the guide chart indicates how to arrange the pattern on the goods so that there will be no unnecessary waste in cutting. In any case, lay the pattern on so that the pieces come close together and the waste is as slight as possible. Be very careful that the lengthwise perforations of the pattern are upon the warp (lengthwise) thread of the goods. Stripes or figures must run exactly up and down in the finished garment.

In each section of pattern in several places, taking care that the curves and corners are flat on the goods.

Cut out the pieces, allowing for seams. If allowance has not been made for them in the pattern, otherwise cut exactly around the edge. Use large shears, and cut with a long, steady stroke, not a short, choppy one. Accurate cutting is the greatest help toward a good looking garment. Put all patterns as indicated by the pattern, using small scissors and being careful not to cut them so deep that they will interfere with the work. Mark perforations with chalk, pencil or thread.

Follow the paper pattern, and fold all pieces carefully, and place pieces to be cut.

The collections of the United States Department of Agriculture are made by the United States Department of Agriculture. Most commercial patterns give a table showing the amount of material of different widths or weights for the garment. If the amount is not stated it must be estimated, giving two considerations: the measurements of the pattern and of the person who is to wear the garment.

VENTILATED BOX FOR BREAD
Hot Product Should Not Be Wrapped Immediately as Moisture Causes Mould in Breads.

Bread and cakes should be kept in a ventilated box. The United States Department of Agriculture reminds the housewife that bread should not be wrapped immediately. The moisture of fresh bread causes mould to form. The bread box should be opened once a week, wiped dry, and sweetened.

Crackers and cookies, on the other hand, lose their crispness by absorbing moisture from the air. They should be kept in airtight boxes wrapped in parchment or paraffin paper, if possible.

Helps Fish Flavor.
You will improve the flavor of fish if you sprinkle a little salt in the fat in which it is fried.

NEW ENGLAND CROP LOOK REASONABLY

Reports for the New England Reporting Service as of August 1st that the outlook for crops is fair to good yields and high quality.

NEW ENGLAND CROP OUT-LOOK REASONABLY GOOD

Reports for the New England Crop Reporting Service as of August 1, show that the outlook for crops is mostly fair to good yields and high quality.

Most of the main hay crop has been harvested with but little rain damage, and although yields outside southern Maine, northern New Hampshire, and Vermont run slightly under average, the quality and feeding value are excellent. Southern Maine, northern New Hampshire, and Vermont have big hay crops. Lack of help will cause some hay to go unharvested, and the harvested acreage of wild hay is likely to be lessened. Late rains are bringing the green hay crop on rapidly. Pastures which during the drought had become badly dried up, are reviving, and should help to keep the live stock in good condition. The other feed crops oats, barley, buckwheat, and corn are not quite up to average, due to lack of rains in June and early July, but corn is now coming on fast.

Prospects for the New England potato crop declined from a forecast, July 1, of 37,640,000 bushels to 36,546,000 bushels, August 1. Last year's short crop was 32,410,000 and the 5 year average 37,760,000. Up to date July, the season in Aroostook, Maine and in Connecticut was unfavorable, but late rains are making rapid improvement in Aroostook's crop. The stand there was early planted quite poor, but later opinion considers it up to average for the country as a whole. Elsewhere in New England the crop mostly is in good condition and promises well.

The August 1 forecast for United States potatoes is 379,559,000 bushels, against 381,726,000 forecast July 1, and last year's bumper crop of 451,187,000 and the five year average of 390,173,000. High brought small declines in New York, Minnesota, and Colorado, but other states gained about an equal amount. Marketwise, the present outlook appears quite favorable.

Reports from the fruit men forecast a commercial apple crop for New England of 1,600,000 barrels against 1,500,000 last year, and the five year average of 1,163,000. July brought a slight decline. In spite of many irregularities, the crop outlook tends to be quite uniform over New England this year. Aroostook and Transcend lead in all states, while McIntosh leads in fall apples with Wealthy and Snow as close second. Snow in Maine is reported quite abundant, but on the whole, the outlook is for fruit of good quality. New England's peach crop is mostly quite good, but years are generally a light crop.

Washington county, Maine, produces the bulk of the United States commercial cherry crop, and reports a good crop this year.

The Connecticut fruit crop of all seasons is now being harvested and marketed, and yields run from 200 to 400 bags per acre. Bets have 17 per cent of the total onion acreage, and seed onions 5 per cent. Seed onions are mostly poor, due to unfavorable weather and thrips. Late rains should benefit the crop more or less.

Breaking away from a succession of years unfavorable to tobacco, this season promises a tobacco crop much better in yield and quality than has been realized in several years. Rain damage to date is less than usual, and early crops are being harvested in good condition.

Massachusetts holds first place in the production of cranberries, and the present outlook is for a crop much better than for some years past.

PROTECTION OF WHITE PINE FROM BLISTER RUST PAYS BIG DIVIDENDS

The experience of the past 7 years in protecting the white pine blisters has been so profitable that the cost of the work is being paid by the State. Protection is so profitable that the State is now paying for the work. The cost of the work is being paid by the State. The cost of the work is being paid by the State.

The cost of the work is being paid by the State. The cost of the work is being paid by the State. The cost of the work is being paid by the State. The cost of the work is being paid by the State. The cost of the work is being paid by the State.

Assuming reconstruction necessary in 5 years, the cost of protection per acre would amount to 4 or 5 cents per year. According to U. S. Forest Service figures the average even-aged, fully-stocked white pine lot should yield by its 40th year at least 23,500 board feet, while stands on best sites should yield 32,500 board feet. At a stumpage rate of $10.00 per thousand board feet, this 40 year old pine would be worth from $235 to $325 per acre. At 5 cents per year for protection from the blister rust, the cost for 40 years would be but $2.00 per acre on protected areas, plus interest charges. This leaves a net income of $233 to $323 from the land, whereas on unprotected areas the value of the crop would be seriously reduced by blister rust, and in areas where cunts and gooseberries are abundant, the rust would cause a total loss of the crop.

An example of the potential profit in pine protection is illustrated by work done in the town of Peterborough, Mass., where control measures have been applied. In this town, 639,976 cunts and gooseberries were destroyed on 11,420 acres which contained an aggregate of 7075 acres in white pine. The cost of protecting this pine, the value of which was estimated at $241,460, necessitated an expenditure of only 1.55 per cent of the pine value.

Consult your local blister rust agent or your Farm Bureau, or the State Forester and solicit their advice concerning the best methods of protecting your pines against the blister rust.

CONSERVATION OF VISION IN SCHOOLS

Two weeks after the inauguration of the courses for the preparation of teachers for sight conservation at the state university and the state normal schools, Maine has the nucleus of an army of crusaders against blindness which gives promise of wiping out in this state the preventable causes of this serious and common handicap.

Approximately one hundred picked teachers—one from each school district and all looking forward to becoming rural supervisors—have taken the special course in sight conservation offered at the normal school at Castine this summer as the result of a co-operative arrangement between the normal school, The Maine Public Health Association, and the National Committee for the Prevention of Blindness, whose headquarters are in the Russell Sage Foundation Building, New York City.

Mrs. Winifred Hathaway, secretary of the National Committee, who came to Maine to give the course first at the University of Maine and then at the normal school, found such a warm interest in the subject that she has acceded to the request of a group of rural Red Cross nurses for special classes in addition to the classes at the university and the normal school. There have also been a number of conferences at which Mrs. Hathaway has explained to the teachers, social workers and health workers of this state the need for conservation of vision activities, particularly among children. As a result of the interest in the prevention of blindness aroused by Mrs. Hathaway's visit and of the actual information concerning the most modern methods of sight saving which has been gained by the teachers and nurses of the state, school children of Maine, when they come back to their classes in September, will be taught not only the three R's and other usual school subjects, but also how to avoid eyestrain, eye accidents and eye infections.

At the same time the National Committee for the Prevention of Blindness is working on the problem of saving the sight of children from another angle. Under the sponsorship of the Illuminating Engineering Society and the American Institute of Architects, and in cooperation with a series of other organizations, the National Committee is launching a new code of school lighting. When this code has been completed and approved it will be possible to carry around in the state of Maine a code which will set a plan of school lighting which has been drafted by the country's best illuminating engineers, school architects, and students of the social, health and educational problems of children.

The National Committee has always felt that one of the best ways of keeping the eyes of youth bright and useful was to interest the children themselves in the care of their eyes. To intensify the efforts that have been made in this direction during the ten years of the existence of the National Committee, there has recently been organized the Junior Committee for the Prevention of Blindness. Any boy or girl is eligible for membership in this committee which carries with it a Junior News Letter and series of children's stories in which the value of sound eyes is told indirectly, but clearly.

It takes a rich country to spend the taxation that this country spends.

The first gas company in the United States was established in 1818, and there are now 45,000,000 persons in the country who use gas for lighting, heating and cooking, and customers increase at the rate of 350,000 a year.

ENCOURAGING ADVANCE IN U. S. HOME LIFE AND INDUSTRY

In eight years electric light and power companies alone have attracted $25,000 consumers as purchasers of company stock. The official estimate is that a total of one million customer stock owners will be rolled up within the next three years.

One utility company recently distributed a $10,000,000 issue among 40,000 customers and 16,500 employees.

W. E. Greed, president of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company, this year radiated his address at the annual meeting, and the company even went so far as to rig up receivers in different communities so that entire audiences could hear him speak.

The industry figures upon requiring $10,000,000 new capital next year.

Bell telephones in the United States far outnumber telephones in all other countries of the world combined. There are 10,000 separate telephone companies in the United States, of which 9,200 are owned by state or local governments. These are also many rural and cooperative lines, over 500,000 of which are owned by the Bell system.

Telephone and employees, it is figured, will form one of the country's total capital resources. The amount coming from the stockholders this year is expected to amount to $100,000,000.

Telephone is one of the most useful of modern inventions, and it is being used in many ways.

Drying Plants in Open Streets. The dried of Jalisco—the rajah city or capital of the "native state" of Jalisco, one of the several feudatory states that today go to make up the Mexican Republic of northern India—have but one way of drying out their goods taken from the pot. The long, wide places must be carried about by two men in the sunshine and breeze of the open streets. Therefore, at every turn one sees great masses of chicken bones about amid the bustling activity. A specialty is a kind of treatment of turban cloth, so that they take several dyes at once. Often these dyes are blue and four colors in watercolor patterns. These drying yards are a very hot of color to the already kaleidoscopic marketplace. To look down along one of the wide main thoroughfares of Jalisco is to believe one is looking at a pageant, a circus or a festival.

A grocer on Beaubien street was explaining some of the little dramas of the trade. Take mustard, he said. Mustard would be pretty cheap if it were not for the containers it comes in. "A traveling man," he continued, "offered me a new brand of mustard a while ago at a good price and I ordered a quantity. It sold fast. When he arrived again I told him I wanted more. But I found the price was boosted. 'Why is that?' I asked him. 'It seems that in figuring up his costs the new manufacturer had figured the cost of his glass jar, the label and the tin cover, but had forgotten the cost of the mustard.'—Detroit News.

Fasting Among Negroes

In the earlier days fasting among negroes was a common custom preceding conversion. Dr. Charles T. Walker, a distinguished preacher of the colored race, known as the "Black Surgeon," describes his own experience in his biography, the Detroit News states. On Wednesday of a certain week in the month of June, while he was hoeing cotton, Walker decided to become a "seeker." He followed the usual custom. When he reached the end of the row, without saying a word to anybody, he jumped over the fence, and went into the woods. Without eating or drinking, without seeing anyone, he remained in the woods until the following Saturday afternoon, when he was "happily converted."

Interned Watches

The man who had just taken his watch from the repair shop asked, for curiosity's sake, how long timepieces were kept, when left there by careless owners. "Well," said the repair man, "in the first place, we never sell a watch no matter how long the owner leaves it here. But a few days ago a man came in to claim his watch and was actually pained because we experienced a little delay in finding it. It had been here almost exactly three years."—Detroit News.

Allen Brooks, for 20 years assistant secretary of the department of public utilities at the State House, Boston, is publishing a compilation of the laws of Massachusetts relating to gas and electric companies.

An intoxicated pigeon cooling softly and reclining about the sidewalk on Main street, Lawton, Me., was found by Arthur Goodwin and Fred Ham. It soon became very groggy, and in a hopeless condition was removed to Mr. Goodwin's home, where it sobored off during the night and appeared to be in perfectly good health when it was released next morning.

Joseph, aged 14, son of Antonio De Palco, was taken to a Worcester, Mass., hospital suffering from probably fatal punctures of the abdomen caused by the explosion of a coil of covered coal mine blasting wire which he had and three young companions found in a pile of coal in a coal yard and placed on a fire under a boiler in the yard. The police are investigating.

A successful case of applying adrenalin chloride to the heart of an apparently dead person was reported when Dr. H. Leo Devine of Springfield, Mass., revived 1-year-old Louis Lager. The child fell from its crib in the floor in such a way as to strangle before the mother discovered the accident. Dr. Devine tried all other possible means of saving life before he resorted to the drug.

The Smith & Dove Manufacturing Company of Andover, Mass., has awarded service pins to the older employees. James Phillips, who had worked for the company 55 years until he was pensioned two years ago, was the recipient of a gold pin with the Smith & Dove seal, set with clipped diamonds. This pin is awarded after 50 years of service, and the only other one to receive it was Alexander Largent, who was retired some time ago.

Abusing buildings in the city ponds will be done more secretly in the future, following a fine of $5 imposed on Carl Hagrove of Thompsonville, Springfield, Mass., District Court (Carl was accused on picking a pond by bed from the pond in Forest Park and when Judge Hardy asked if there was any further charge against him, Carl jumped up and said the man attempted to beat a frog with a stick. Then Judge Hardy imposed the fine.

An investigation of an alleged "foot-lagger" insurance company which provides counsel and pays all fines and costs assessed on its members when they are convicted in court is being made by the Springfield, Mass., police and starting developments are promised. The police say that the "president" of the insurance club is a well known storekeeper, who deals in malt, hops and other ingredients used for the manufacture of home brew and moonshine. The club members, numbering more than 1000, according to the police, consist of customers at this store, who pay $1 a week for protection.

Tax Commissioner Henry F. Long has sent out to all Massachusetts assessors statements of the distribution of the income tax according to their local share and the amount of the state tax for the city or town. The item under the head of the income tax is included also the sum of which is distributed under the head of the allowance for school support. Commissioner Long estimates the total income tax for this year at $14,000,000 against $11,000,000 in 1922, or a gain of about 27 per cent.

Completing the "Decline and Fall"

It was on the day, or rather night, of the 27th of June, 1787, between the hours of eleven and twelve, that I wrote the last lines of the last page, in a summer-house in my garden. After laying down my pen I took several turns in a berceau, or covered walk of acacias, which commands a prospect of the country, the lake, and the mountains. The air was temperate, the sky was serene, the silver orb of the moon was reflected from the waters and all nature was silent. I will not dissemble the first emotions of joy on the recovery of my freedom, and perhaps, the establishment of my fame. But my pride was soon humbled, and a sober melancholy was spread over my mind, by the idea that I had taken an everlasting leave of an old and agreeable companion—Gibson.

RUMFORD

John Pratt of the Rumford Falls Trust Company has been chosen to serve as temporary treasurer of local Relief fund for the victims of the Waldo street fire. The National Red Cross organization have pledged $1,000 in aid of the unfortunate, and the local fund has reached $750.00. The greatest concern has been over the housing question, although some few have succeeded in obtaining permanent quarters, and all are temporarily located. But as the question of rents was somewhat serious before the fire, the great catastrophe has greatly increased the serious aspect of the question and has hardly hopes were to look for housing quarters.

Those serving on the committee for relief are: Mr. J. J. Harris, chairman; Mrs. W. F. Orr, Mrs. A. J. Sturges, Eugene Elliott, Oliver Peterson and James R. O'Brien.

Mr. L. P. Murphy of Bethel is a guest of the daughter and husband, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Murphy of the Virginia Hotel. Mr. Murphy formerly lived in Rumford, and was employed in the jewelry store of John A. Higgins.

Miss Anna Hall, daughter of the Rumford Falls factory, is enjoying a month's vacation from her duties which she is spending at Bethel, where she has spent the summer, which she will spend some of the time with her two brothers, who reside in Bethel. Miss Katherine Howe, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Howe of Washington street will substitute for her in the library until her return which will not be until after Labor day.

Miss Anna Foster is enjoying a two weeks' vacation from her duties at the Rumford Falls Trust Company, which she is spending at Bethel Point Lodge Lake Umbagog.

Mrs. Leland Harrington of Lewiston, Me. is a guest at the home of her sister, Mrs. C. P. Veale, and family of York street.

Mr. and Mrs. George H. Murphy and son, Harold, of Franklin street are spending a two weeks' vacation at their old home in Watkinson, N. Y. Mr. Murphy is manager of the Rumford Falls Trust Company.

Mrs. William Higgins is assisting in the summer shop of Mrs. Clara A. Farrington on Washington street.

Miss Elizabeth Foster, daughter of Mrs. Marshall E. Foster, has left for Norway where she will make her home with her mother, Miss Mary Miller, for the present. Miss Foster plans to go to Norway later on.

The tower house, so called, on York street, which has been owned for many years by Mrs. A. A. Blake of Hallowell, has been recently sold to the Rev. Mr. J. J. Harris of the Rumford Falls Trust Company.

Mrs. Jan Davis (widow) has taken rooms with Mrs. H. J. Davis on Washington street for a year.

George Washburn, photographer, and his wife, Mrs. Washburn, will be in town this week making up and will complete the photograph paper and the company on this field day at Bethel Point, and will make orders and deliver them.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander McDonald are making arrangements upon the home of a son, who has been named Joseph Francis.

The marriage of William Higgins and Miss Marie McDonald took place last week at St. Athanasius Church. Mrs. P. P. Davis was officiating.

Miss Agnes Sturges is enjoying a vacation from her duties at the R. K. Day Co. company.

Miss Dorothy, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Hawley of Portland are now here enjoying a vacation at Bethel Point.

The fire which was caused by James W. Higgins, manager of the Oxford Paper Company, occurred on the night of the 10th while he was in the city on business. The fire was caused by a gas leak in the boiler room, and the fire spread to the main building. The loss was estimated at $100,000.

Miss Mary Higgins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Higgins, is spending a vacation at Bethel Point.

Miss Mary Higgins, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Higgins, is spending a vacation at Bethel Point.

is reported that this one to be built will be equipped with a stage to assure the presentation of road shows in addition to super pictures, offering Rumford the equal of which will not be found in any other town of its size in New England.

Immediately after the recent big fire, the selection of the town realizing the condition of affairs, communicated with State Fire Commissioner Spencer, and requested if possible to waive the 45 day clause. Then, as soon as settlements were made by the insurance companies, and proper papers signed, the parties insured could get their money. This would enable those who had suffered by the fire to formulate their future plans, and would assist greatly in the matter of determining just what they could do. The Selectmen have received a most favorable reply from Mr. Spencer, and the chances are that the request will go through. During the past week the adjusters from the various insurance companies have been in town working with the local agents on the claims of the insured, and it is understood that practically all claims have been settled. From facts gathered from local agents as to the amount of insurance carried by those in the Waldo street section, the aggregate amount will total $250,000. The majority of the companies realize the seriousness of the local situation, and are willing to do all they can, it is said, to have the 45 day clause waived, and the money paid at once. With fall closely on us, should the property owner have to wait 45 days, the chances are that not much building would be done this year. Much of the property owners are ready to start building at once, while others are not in any position to state just what they are able to do. At a meeting of the property owners to that section held last week, an association to be known as the Waldo Street Property Owners Association was formed, and officers elected. It is the idea of this association to lay out plans as to the reconstruction of the street, formulate a system of financing the building. The association would purchase the supplies necessary for building in bulk, in which case a greatly amount might be saved. The following officers were elected: President, Albert Behrman; secretary, Eugene Phillips; Committee, J. J. Harris and Joseph Stetson.

Mr. R. S. Tyler and family from East Bethel were in the place Sunday.

Mr. George P. Russell of Haverhill, Mass., has been the guest of his brother-in-law, A. J. Peaslee, Mr. Russell and Mr. Peaslee spent Friday at Durkee's camp in Upton.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Hutchinson and sons were in Dixfield, Sunday. They brought Miss Maudie Haselton home with them.

Mr. and Mrs. Mellen Whitman from West Bethel have been guests at A. L. Whitman's.

Miss Ida Haselton has been visiting her nephew at Skillington.

Mrs. Maurice Tyler has received word that her sister, Mrs. Malcolm Jordan, who has been very ill at her home in Mechanic Falls, is now comfortable.

Mrs. Alma Tyler is entertaining her grandmother Mrs. Betsey Cross, of Albany.

SUNDAY RIVER
Mrs. William Gorman is on the sick list and her daughter, Mrs. Ralphwood Howe, of Gorham is caring for her.

Mr. and Mrs. Julius Howard of Ontario are spending two days with her parents at the Crosby farm.

Mr. James Day of British Columbia was calling on friends last week. He has not been here for twenty years.

Mr. Fred Cook of Haverhill, Mass., spent the week end with his sister, Mrs. A. G. Eames.

Mr. Allen Walker is sawing pulpwood for Howard Bailey.

Messrs. Joe Spinnay and H. M. Kendall were in Lewiston, Saturday.

The Olson brothers are sawing for Harry Bryant and boarding at Will Powers.

Mr. Lee Vail visited friends in this place recently.

Miss Ruth Crosby, who has been spending her vacation at the Crosby farm has returned to her home in Arlington.

Mr. and Mrs. Fisher have returned to their home in Lowell, Mass., after spending the summer in town.

Mrs. Wade Thurston was in town, Monday.

SOUTH BETHEL

Harry Iveson of Auburn was in town recently.

Key Yeagley was at home over the week end.

Scott Martin and Archie Cole were in town last week, buying cattle.

Mrs. Charlie Schillinger of New Gloucester is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Year Bear, for a few days.

STATE OF MAINE

To all persons interested in either of the Estates hereinafter named.

At a Probate Court, at Bethel, in and for the County of Oxford, on the 14th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three. The following matters having been presented for the action thereupon hereinafter indicated, it is hereby ORDERED:

That notice thereof be given to all persons interested, by causing a copy of this order to be published three weeks successively in the Oxford County Citizen, a newspaper published at Bethel, in said County, that they may appear at a Probate Court to be held at Rumford on the fourth Tuesday of August, A. D. 1923, at 9 o'clock in the forenoon, and be heard thereon if they so desire.

Lillian M. Morse late of Bethel, deceased; petition for the appointment of L. P. Morse as administrator of the estate of said deceased to act without bond, presented by said L. P. Morse, brother.

Emma Cough late of Bethel, deceased; will and petition for probate thereof and the appointment of Mary Nevins as executrix of the same to act without bond as expressed in said will, by said Mary Nevins one of the executrices named in the will.

Lillian A. Blake late of Bethel, deceased; first account presented for allowance by Eliphaz A. Blake, executor.

Mary J. Bartlett late of Greenwood, deceased; first account presented for allowance by Eliza C. Park, executrix.

Witness, Arletta E. Stearns, Judge of said Court at Bethel, this 14th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three.

HI-POWER GASOLINE

Do you remember the gasoline you used to buy—way back in 1910 or '11? You will probably remember the price at any rate—10 cents or so at the filling stations. And 10 cents for a different acting, sweeter smelling, snappier gasoline than you usually buy today at three or more times that price.

Those were the days when gasoline would test anywhere from 63° Be. to 76°, with an end-point or dry-point about 330° F.

Today what do we find? A disinterested report of tests of gasoline sold in the different cities of America in July, 1923, showed that the average dry-point of gasoline marketed in Pittsburgh was 454°, covering a range between 392° and 518° F.

For the entire country the average was 459° F. Such high end-point gasolines are directly responsible for the largest part of the troubles with the automobile engine, and to is a recognized fact, proved by the researches of various Government bureaus and our foremost automotive engineers, that such gasolines make practically impossible further increase in the efficiency of the automotive engine.

An eminent engineer, speaking before the American Petroleum Institute, declared that it is very doubtful whether any portion of a portion fuel having a distillation temperature above 400° F. is of value in an automobile engine in general use. To illustrate his point, he compared the higher fractions of gasoline to cinders in coal, which give no heat and by clogging the furnace prevent good coal from doing its work efficiently. The comparison is well made because the higher fractions cannot be broken up in the present-day carburetor. These fractions enter the manifold in liquid form, despite such precautionary means as jacketed carburetors and special manifolds, hotspots, etc., and affect the proper distribution of the gas to the cylinders.

Condensation follows. Incomplete combustion takes place. The oil in the crank case is diluted by the higher fractions which find their way past the piston rings. The power output, the efficiency, the life of the motor, all are vitally affected. Such gasolines, especially in cold weather, are largely responsible for (1) difficulty in starting, (2) heavy carbon deposits, (3) sluggish action, (4) knocking, (5) dilution of motor oil and bearing trouble.

Gasoline, however satisfactory in the motor of today, would be useless in the cars of a decade ago, and would be most unsatisfactory in modern high-compression aviation engines. For this reason, the desirable specifications of gasoline for general automotive use cannot be started, but the principal essential properties of gasoline can be enumerated:

(1) Highly volatile products should not be present in such excess that evaporation loss or danger in handling and storage is excessive; but in sufficient quantity to insure starting the engine under reasonably favorable conditions without preheating the fuel.

(2) Non-volatile constituents or fractions boiling above 400° F. should not be present, for reasons previously stated.

(3) The gasoline should be free from all non-combustible material and be neutral in action, i. e. free from acids used in its manufacture, or any foreign material, such as water, that may attack the metal, or after combustion form carbonaceous deposits in the cylinder.

(4) The gasoline should be free from rank or disagreeable odors, and water white in color.

Valvoline Red Star Gasoline, a Pennsylvania distillate straight run product of 82° Be. gravity and 368° F. end point, and it is safely under the 400° limit previously referred to. Thus every drop of it is utilized in the combustion chamber. Faster starting, greater power and economy, and mild action on the engine are the results of its use. Compare it over a month's time, or even a day, with the 60-80° kerosenehead blended gasolines as frequently sold, and you will find it really does make a difference.

Without a good motor oil, it is folly to use a good gasoline, or vice versa, for one bad product will offset the advantages of the other. Valvoline Motor Oil are recommended from Pennsylvania crude oil—the crude which has no equal. They are the result of over thirty years refining experience, the highest product of up-to-the-minute refining equipment. From every standpoint we are fully equipped to turn out automotive oil which are unsurpassed, and we have been doing so for years. Valvoline has a reputation for high quality. It is acknowledged to be one of the best and one that can always be depended upon.

Turned the Best

Three Kinds of Motors.

There are three types of destructive motor oil which we must watch out for. We value our kerosenehead gasolines as the best and the best. These are the kerosene head, the kerosene head, and the kerosene head.

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER I.—On the isolated Menger ranch, on the southern border, Deborah, a recently trained nurse, is in attendance on Mrs. Sanchez, who had been recently killed, victim of a desperado. Immediately after the death, Bob Menger, a desperado, arrives and takes possession. He insists Deborah and she resolves to leave, but there seems no possibility of her getting away alone.

CHAPTER II.—Menger glows over Deborah's plight, telling her he has a plan for her. He tells her that she will marry him tomorrow. Horrified, the girl accuses a revolver.

CHAPTER III.—The Justice, Cornelius, a scoundrel and a man of law, arrives with a party, among them the "Prisco Kid," a notorious desperado. The girl looks herself up.

CHAPTER IV.—Forced by Bob, Menger, Deborah flees from the ranch and hides in a cave. She escapes the marriage ceremony. Immediately afterward, she escapes and reaches her room in the hotel.

CHAPTER V.—Menger seeks the girl, but she stands him up. He goes to the stable, hoping to secure a horse and escape, but finds the horse has been stolen. He goes to the stable, hoping to secure a horse and escape, but finds the horse has been stolen. He goes to the stable, hoping to secure a horse and escape, but finds the horse has been stolen.

CHAPTER VI.—The "Prisco Kid" tells her he is a desperado, and that he is a friend of Menger's. He tells her that she will marry him tomorrow. Horrified, the girl accuses a revolver.

CHAPTER VII.—Alone with Kellen, the girl becomes somewhat apprehensive. She tells him that she is a nurse, and that she is a friend of Menger's. He tells her that she will marry him tomorrow. Horrified, the girl accuses a revolver.

CHAPTER VIII.—Kellen explains that the "Prisco Kid" is a desperado, and that he is a friend of Menger's. He tells her that she will marry him tomorrow. Horrified, the girl accuses a revolver.

CHAPTER IX.—While the girl is sleeping, Kellen disappears. She wakes up, and finds that she is alone. She goes to the stable, hoping to secure a horse and escape, but finds the horse has been stolen. She goes to the stable, hoping to secure a horse and escape, but finds the horse has been stolen.

CHAPTER X.—Deborah's captor comes to what is apparently a cave. He tells her that she will marry him tomorrow. Horrified, the girl accuses a revolver.

CHAPTER XI.—While resting, after a terrible experience, Deborah overheard a conversation between Menger and Kellen, apparently a violent one. She goes to the stable, hoping to secure a horse and escape, but finds the horse has been stolen. She goes to the stable, hoping to secure a horse and escape, but finds the horse has been stolen.

rock strewn and almost as desolate as had been the desert itself, but with here and there a patch of grass visible, and a few scattered, wind-racked trees. It was a scene scarcely less dreary than the upper plain, yet to Deborah and her horse was most welcome.

The latter came down the slanting bank gingerly and made for the nearest water hole, the girl slipping quickly from the saddle and seeking to quench her thirst further upstream.

The water, slightly brackish, but still fairly clear and pure, brought new life, the animal wandering about in its fresh environment, lapping contentedly at the scattered tufts of grass, while Deborah studied her surroundings with awakened interest.

Old Tom Menger, in his rides together, had taught her some of the fundamentals of plainscraft, how to observe this thing and that, when alone in the wilds. Now she applied these lessons eagerly, searching for some evidence of that trail which she felt convinced must run up this lonely valley.

Nothing could be better adapted to the purpose of these outlaws than the course of this desolate stream, a mere thread extending through leagues of sand, lying so slightly below the level to conceal their movements, and yet furnishing water for their stock. Surely they must have left some trail behind.

But if so no trace remained along the western shore. Convinced of this, Deborah, leading her horse, crossed the narrow stream, stepping from rock to rock, and clambering up the level plateau on the other side. Even here little was visible, and she would have overlooked even these signs but for old Tom's training. Evidence was found—the scattered dead ashes of a fire; the mark of a shod horse's hoof, an open sheath knife, the blade not rusted from exposure, and a half-dozen empty cartridge shells. Later, upstream a few rods, she found where a dozen horses had been tied to a picket rod, stamping their hoofs into the soft soil. But beyond this point the soil ceased, and whatever trail there was vanished on a surface of hard rock which left no trace. Nevertheless she mounted once more, and rode on, still with her course to the south.

How terribly exhausted she was, reeling in the saddle from faintness. She ached from head to foot, and she felt strangely dizzy. Twice she dismounted to bathe her face in the running water, but had found it so difficult to climb up the saddle again she dare not venture a third time. She could only cling tight to the pommel, with eyes closed, and let the horse pick his own way along the out law trail. Her cap (could this be her cap?) She opened her eyes to look up, the great cliffs towering so high above she could scarcely gain glimpses of a ribbon of blue sky. It was the twilight where she rode, the walls purpled like, nothing clearly visible a dark gash ahead. She stopped at the dreary loneliness, the awful silence. If this was her camp, then she had come to the end of her journey.

She closed her eyes again, struggling for control, for courage, and hung on the pommel to hold herself upright. Then the horse stopped as though gripped by a hand, and a voice said shortly:

"Here! but it's a woman. Say what you suster, and tell us what per done here."

She stared at him dumbly, a boy in black, his head grasping her bridle rein, a short rifle in the hollow of his other arm, his face featuring a blackish scar.

"Astern, was yer? If I of a place ter suster."

"Are you a soldier?" she asked, struggling with her dizziness. "A cavalryman?"

"Sure—U. S. You're Yank too, ain't yer? That's what bothers me: how if yer was Mex, I'd know what to do."

"What?"

"Husle yer on to the front to an the rest of 'em are Yank too."

"Yes, yes, I know," she exclaimed excitedly. "You are here to intercept gun runners across the line. I've been hearing for you all night. How be it dead—killed?"

"Dead! Who's dead?"

"Captain Kellen."

She reeled in the saddle, everything black before her. The trooper sprang and caught her as she fell.

CHAPTER XIV

"Alvares' Lost Mine."

Kellen lay breathless on his back, staring up uncomprehendingly through the tangled branches of a tree. He was bruised, dazed, scarcely certain whether he was dead or alive, yet dimly aware of what had actually occurred. He remembered the spit of flame out of the darkness, the report, the bullet striking him, and the horror of that awful fall, as he grasped madly at the air. And what then? Did he lose consciousness? Did the shock numb his brain? He must have crashed headlong through those tree limbs, his progress stopped and diverted, until, by some fate, his bruised and battered body had been flung here, like a bit of driftwood on the beach.

He extended his arms, and felt about to be sure—yes, he lay there on a shelf of earth, out of which that tree grew; the gnarled trunk was within reach of his hand, and another tree, a smaller one, was at the left. It was so dark there he could see little, yet that fire was still below, and if he should roll off, he would have no other sheer drop, God knew how far. He dare make no effort to turn over. How hard was he hurt? He dreaded to learn the truth, yet forced himself partially to sit up and examine. There was a hole in the coat, but none in the shirt beneath; the flesh was unharmed, but painful to the touch and decidedly swollen. The bullet had struck him, but failed to penetrate; had been deflected by something—his watch! Surely; he carried it there in his upper coat pocket. His fingers drew the wreck forth, and the bullet dropped into his lap; he picked it up—either it—with a queer feeling of horror, and then placed it in a pocket. The ruins of the watch smashed beyond repair, he flung away. For the moment he was dazed, what it all meant remained vague and confused.

Kellen began to understand, and his mind to function. He was not killed, not even seriously hurt. He had been almost unconsciously saved; but now he must nerve himself. He harbored no doubt as to who had shot him, or why. The very manner in which it had been done, the concealment of the night, revealed the method of Bob Menger. It was his fashion, his style; the way of a coward who never met his enemies face to face. Yet why should the fellow have held him as an enemy? The only answer Kellen could find to this query was Deborah. There was no other satisfactory explanation. Bob had not previously known the woman had left the ranch; he believed her still there, hidden in his stepmother's room, his helpless victim on his return. Otherwise the man had nothing against Kellen, had no suspicions of him, except possibly a desire that he keep out of this particular affair. That surely was not sufficient to justify an attempt at cold-blooded murder. No, it must be the girl.

And what had become of her? Kellen had no recollection of a second shot, so it was altogether probable she had been spared, and was again a prisoner in the hands of her brutal husband. If so, no greater service could be rendered the girl than an exposure of Bob Menger's rascality. With the fellow once safely in the hands of the law she would obtain release, and the opportunity of escape if she so desired. And he felt no doubt as to her desire. The man had taken her by force; her earlier dislike had been changed into hatred—and since then another impelling force might have come into her life. Kellen smiled, sitting up in the darkness, his mind dwelling over the memory of those hours that had passed together. He realized suddenly how much he already cared for her, how deeply her weakness had impressed him; that it would mean if she should turn back to Bob Menger.

The very thought of such a possibility served him to action, to a just follow-up of the business. He had seen that in the depths of her eyes he would never forget, he would live to recall that moment again. The memory was so inspiring and brave. Bob where could he turn? Where could he go? He was a man pined against twenty at least, his only aid and refuge being Menger's belief that he was dead and safely out of the way. He must remain unseen, unobserved, until he learned the truth. His mind grasped the situation swiftly, as he planned his own course of action. There was no reason why Fate's decree should remain in the valley; they had already unraveled and stored away out of sight whatever they had to transport. Their whole interest must be to get safely away on the dark trail before daylight. Already the fire had died down into mere embers, and he believed, a part at least of the pack train had departed. After they all had gone only Menger, and his small party would be left behind. How many there might be of these Kellen had no means of knowing, yet it was scarcely probable many were in the secret of what was going on. Menger himself, Sanchez and one or two others perhaps, not enough to prove particularly dangerous, if they did not even suspect his being alive. Tomorrow surely that squad of cavalrymen must appear from Hot canyon; they would scout up this way if nothing occurred to detain them. Those were their orders, and if they followed the trail, they could scarcely fail to reach this hole in the desert. All he needed to do in the meanwhile was to discover exactly what this pack was up to, and then wait.

To his mind the key of the whole mystery must lie in that cave tunnel described by Deborah. If he could once probe into its secret the whole strange case would be solved. If any investigation was to be made, it must be attempted now—he would take the chance.

To decide, with Kellen, was to act. The peril of the adventure scarcely occurred to him; his life had long before been insured him to danger. All he sought was opportunity. Slowly, cautiously, keeping well back in the shadow, he lowered his body down the face of the cliff, taking advantage of every irregularity, outcropping rocks giving him foot and handhold, until he finally reached the firm turf below. As he glanced back over his course, marking the high outline of the crest against the lighter sky above, the memory of that awful plunge over the edge left him for an instant sick and nervous. Then he drove the recollection from him with a bitter laugh. What odds! He could not stand there like a frightened child in the dark. He moved on in the depth of the cliff shadow with eyes searching the gloom and ears listening for any sound.

In that darkness he scarcely realized where he was, yet, when he came to it, experienced no difficulty in recognizing the mound on which he and Deborah had taken breakfast together. He climbed the sloping side cautiously on hands and knees, his revolver drawn and clenched in his nervous fingers. The man was cool now, and ready, advancing steadily through the maze of rocks strewn the surface, until he felt out the slight evidences of a trail. Here was where Deborah must have attempted her retreat, as it skirted the face of the cliff, which bulged out above him. The front was draped with clinging vines, while below he found a tangle of bushes, almost impenetrable. Kellen crept along these, vainly seeking some opening, and finally, in despair, pressed them aside, crawling noiselessly into the dark covert, seeking that opening in the rock which must be hidden somewhere beyond. His discovery eluded him, and it was not until he ventured to stand erect, feeling above the lower barrier of rock, that he really convinced himself of its existence. He stood hesitatingly, his heart thumping from excitement. There was no sound of movement within—only profound silence and impenetrable darkness. Yet surely this could be no storage house, no mere receptacle for stolen goods as he previously had imagined. There was no beaten trail leading to it; no dead, trampled vines, no pathway opening through the shrubs. The secret of the place remained hidden, its shield undisturbed. Whoever came here must have weaved their way as carefully as he had, concealing all evidence of passage, leaving no trail behind.

In spite of the shrinking of his flesh, Kellen began to advance, feeling with his feet, and keeping one hand against the rough side wall. It was a tunnel beyond all doubt, leading at first straight into the cliff, the sides chipped and irregular, leaving to the touch of his fingers the ridge marks of a pick. Men had toiled here, not nature, and had plainly left their handiwork. When? How long ago? What had become of them? "Alvares' Lost Mine!" The words seemed to burn themselves on his mind, and before him arose a vision of the old Spaniard working there alone in the long years ago. Could it be possible? After all this time had he actually rediscovered that ancient storehouse of which all northern Mexico had dreamed? And what of Alvares? He had disappeared, men said; died in the heart of the desert; yet with never to return. Had he met that mysterious death here in this black hole, surrounded by his golden treasure? Did he lie there in loneliness through the long years since? And was he there still as guard over his treasure?

Kellen stopped, holding his breath, conscious of the prehistoric leading back. Was the place accurate? Did Deborah look there correctly, ever for another victim? He cast aside the thought with a gesture of utter scorn. All usage of the supernatural left him, and in its place came men. What was Menger and his outfit doing here? That was what he must find and learn—what he must face and conquer, cautiously, briefly, the darkness closing behind. How low still it was! Was that a steady movement of there to the left? The man wheeled about, revolver swung up, and stood poised and breathless. Straight into his eyes leaped a blinding burst of flame.

Kellen staggered backward, yet instinctively fired at the black, almost shapeless shadow revealed an instant in the flame. The speeding bullet had missed him a hair's breadth, yet in the second of startled surprise he retained no power of action. He had seen the man crouched against the farther wall, a mere black blot, almost unrecognizable. Then that awful darkness again, and silence. With his first return of strength he stepped swiftly to one side, stooping low, and listening for the slightest movement. His heart almost ceased to beat.

He waited a minute, two minutes—it seemed an age—leaning forward, every nerve tense, his very breath suspended, nervous finger on the trigger. G—d! the fellow could not long remain motionless where he was; he would never dare. Unless that chance shot had gone home! The mere suggestion leaping into his brain brought to the surface a flash of courage. It might be, then, as his mark had been, he might as he had fired, the chance shot might have hit, leaving the fellow dead on the rock floor. He had heard no sound, no groan, no muffled fall, yet men sometimes died silently, instantly—there was a hope, a possibility. He advanced an inch at a time, feeling forward with groping foot, still obsessed by the idea that thus he might encounter an outstretched body on the floor. He had gone a foot, two feet, three; then, suddenly his foot dislodged a pebble, which grated sharply in the intense stillness. Instantly the tunnel flamed again; he felt a sting in his shoulder, the impact driving him flat against the side wall—but he saw his man, and of the fellow came trooping back to his mind in vivid memory—cruel, remorseless, without mercy, hunted like a wild beast, yet ever escaping the tolls, he had left a trail of blood over all that land. Well, he was dead now! Yet how came he to be there? Was this his hiding place? or was this man there for some new crime? If so—what? And Bob Menger? Juan Sanchez? Were they also sharers in his villainy? Could they be members of this band's gang? Was it from here he led his hellhounds over the desert and plains?

The recurrence of these names instantly brought back to Kellen a realization of his own peril. Gomez was dead, killed by his hand. Unwittingly, unknowingly, there in the dark, in desperate combat, he had avenged a hundred murders by the thrust of a knife. But these others—they were still alive; they would surely come. There could be no doubt of that. All that Deborah had told flashed across his mind—her encounter with this same Mexican ruffian—why, she had even described the fellow's long, apple arms, but he never once had thought of Gomez—of her creeping onward along the tunnel; the sudden change in its direction, and her stumbling over a dead body in the dark. He recalled the story of her escape, creeping up that narrow passage, through which she could barely squeeze her slender body; the bring after her from below, and her almost shot dead in return; then the desperate struggle which ended on the desert above. And what then? Menger, Bob Menger, going straight to that same hole and calling down for Manuel—using his very name.

Well, there was no Manuel now on guard there, but he could not face these other two alone, and they would surely be there by dawn at least. He arose to his feet, still dazed and confused, hardly able to tell directions, but driven by a wild impulse to escape, to get safely out of that silent blackness, that grave, in which he felt smothered and imprisoned. His groping fingers discovered a crevice in the stone, as though the solid rock had been rent asunder, a deep, irregular gash yawning the length of his arm. He even advanced a step into the strange fissure, wondering at its existence, tempted to explore its secret, when they came! He heard them pressing aside the vines and clambering to the top of the rock which helped conceal the entrance. They did this apparently without fear, with no impeding sense of danger, and then dropped to the floor of the tunnel. There were two of them; he could tell that by the sound—Menger and Sanchez. But where, then, was Deborah Meredith?

CHAPTER XV

The Light Goes Out.

Kellen waited in an agony of suspense, his thought with the missing girl, rather than on his own peril, or the nearness of those men groping blindly toward him in the darkness. That they were surprised, startled at not being greeted by Gomez was plainly evidenced from the first gruff utterance reaching his ears.

"Where the h—l is the fellow?" Menger exclaimed angrily. "I told you I called him from up above and got no answer. Now, by G—d! he isn't even down here."

"Oh, he's here all right. There was no chance for his getting away without our knowing it. We had our men about here all the time."

"Your men?" Menger laughed scornfully. "There greasers; they would only be playthings for Manuel. H—, man! you and your gang couldn't even keep your eyes on 'Prisco'."

"He sure told me one d—n straight story. He seemed to know about all that was going on. I'd heard a lot about him, knew he was a friend of yours, and supposed him all right."

"And spilled all you knew—d—n a Mex, anyhow."

"Well, what? He didn't nothing just now. I did run with him a bit, of course, down below the line. But he wasn't invited into this game, and his being with Garitty was just an accident. At least I took it that way at first. Now I arter reckon it maybe was all a set-up job. I ain't exactly made up my mind what the guy was up to—just suspected something was going on, and decided to butt in. I reckon. But, after he got out here scooping around, there wasn't nothing to do but put him out of the way—specially after he stole my horse."

"I ain't as sure he stole your horse."

"What do you mean?"

"Just what I told you before. You're so bullheaded nobody can tell you nothing. I never did think that fellow you shot was alone. He was talking to somebody when we crept up—Z heard him."

"Talking to himself; you never saw nobody but him."

"No, I didn't; he was up on that rock against the sky, but there might have been somebody else out of sight on the ground. You was in a such a hurry to get to Chateaufort, you wouldn't do anything else."

"Sure, I knew the 'Kid' was alone, and after that tumble he took wouldn't bother me more. We had to get Cap-jerry's gunk out of here before daylight."

"I don't know why. You haven't told me much. Why didn't you let the outfit go on? What did you want to unload the mules here for, and then send them back?"

able. His other qualities remain to be discovered.

One thing has been demonstrated conclusively by the outpouring of the people and the profound grief shown as the funeral train dragged its course across the United States, and that is that the people of this country are not so much as they have been generally engaged in preparing their minds for the past half dozen years, but in the days that have just passed they have registered their passion for their wonderful Government. Perhaps all these "hicks" have been generated by the single desire to make things better for human beings, but whether that is so or not there need no longer be any apprehension regarding the determination of the people to stand by and support their President. All hearts will uphold President Harding and help him to succeed. He starts with the Nation's blessing.

RICKS OF THE WHEAT MARKET
A persistent attempt is being made to discredit the one law which gives the Government regulatory power over grain exchanges. Four months ago wheat sold on the Chicago Board of Trade at $1.27 a bushel. Later it has dropped below the dollar mark. Grain speculators are filling the newspapers with "arguments and proofs" showing how the rules of the wheat market have always been carried by professional traders, who are now refusing to play at the old game for fear of Government interference with their manipulative methods. To give them full credit they make out a plausible case. However, the Department of Agriculture is insistent that selling wheat without running genuine gambling operations will result in the permanent benefit of farmers, and the Government is determined to get rid of the "black-legging" in marketing wheat.

THE MORSE ACQUITTAL

Several months were occupied in the trial of Charles W. Morse and his case for "war frauds." In the end the defendants have been acquitted by a jury that listened to all the evidence. The verdict of not guilty meets with popular and general approval. It appears that the Morse interests rendered as good service to the Government as most large enterprises. The firm was prepared for every eventuality, and its greatest effort apparently was that to cut the excess very cheap at home. But most juries have one that sort of thing themselves, and they regarded the methods of Morse as almost business and necessary to be viewed as dishonest.

Attorney General Cummings has met with a very bad setback through the acquittal of the Morzes. Their case was pointed out as among the "worst" of war frauds. Under the Department of Justice who do better in other prosecutions, there will likely be but little demand for a strong police laid down by Mr. Cummings.

FIRE PREVENTION

The National Fire Protection Association has issued a report on the fire problem in the United States. It is the problem of the future. It is the problem of the present. It is the problem of the past.

ties to adopt the standard building code in order that fire resistance construction may be encouraged.

Also that states adopt building and fire protection requirements for public and private hospitals, schools, asylums and the like, and that an official investigation into the causes of all fires be required.

Perhaps the wisest recommendation of all is that planning for the education of the children and the public generally to careful habits regarding the use of fire.

WEST PARIS

BANK-BROCK

A very pretty home wedding was solemnized at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Brock Pioneer St., Wednesday evening, August 8th, when their only child, Myrtle Madeline, was united in marriage with Earle E. Hane, Rev. H. E. Aldrich officiating. The double ring service was used. The house was prettily decorated with green and white, the young couple standing under a green and white arch with wedding bells. They were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Raymond E. Chase. The bride was given in white step-dress with pearl trimmings. Mrs. Hane graduated from W. P. High School, class of 1922, being the valedictorian of her class, since graduation she has taught at South and West Paris. Mr. Hane is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hane of Rumford. He graduated from West Paris High School, class of 1921. Both are members of the Methodist church and are very popular. Only the immediate relatives of the contracting parties attended the ceremony. Refreshments were served. The young couple are spending their honeymoon at Henry's camp, North Pond, Lake Umbagog. On their return they will board for the present with Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Corbin.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Brock were guests Saturday night of E. J. Mann and family at Camp Iydwilde. Sunday they attended camp meeting at Poland.

RADIO AND WORLD ENLIGHTENMENT

"Rice" Hensberg desired his radio-wooden type blocks and made printing possible nearly five centuries ago, there has been no single invention so closely touching human interest and human welfare as radio, the latest miracle of the ages," says Jas. H. Harbord, president of the Radio Corporation of America. "His messages are flashed over land and sea with the speed of light; the weary schematics cannot cut the cables of the wireless, the winter storms cannot weight it down with sleet or summer suns expand it to darkness. Its potentiality includes utility and recreation; it carries the ear with the strains of music, it moves life and property on sturdy seas, it annihilates distance and penetrates the solitudes of the farthest reaches as it does the mission of the microscope. It is the conscience and the conscience and the inspiration of the world's splendid progress."

OXFORD COUNTY SCOUTS TO GO ON AUTOMOBILE HIKE

Through Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont, Aug. 27-Sept. 1 Inclusive. Executive Perham in Charge of the White Mountain Hikers

One of the interesting events of the year in Oxford County Scouting is scheduled for the week of August 27th. The automobile hike through Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont promises a wonderful trip both in interest and valuable scouting instruction.

Executive Harold C. Perham is in charge of this and plans for a variety of real stuff such as climbing Mt. Washington and visiting the various spots of interest in this Playground of the East. Forest Fire Prevention, First Aid and Practical Out of Doors Scouting will be heavily stressed. Every Scout to "Carry a Match Safe-Safety First!"

All roads lead to Bethel, Maine for the start at 10:30, Monday morning, August 27th. No definite route is given as yet, only that the trip will carry through Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and back by the way of the coast Old Orchard and Portland.

Each troop will provide its own automobile or automobiles for transportation. Hearty cooperation on the part of interested backers of Scouting is making the automobile question an easy proposition. The cost of this trip (including food, gasoline and oil for the car) is set at $7.50 maximum and may reach as low as $6.00. The Wild River hike cost $5.00 per Scout.

Already several carloads of Scouts are guaranteed for this trip. It is expected that at least 10 carloads of Scouts will represent Oxford County on the biggest hike of the year. In spite of the word "auto," every Scout is guaranteed a chance to waste the necessary shoe leather that goes with mountain climbing and travel on foot.
